

Saddam faces the Kurds for his crimes against humanity

This is a historic day to see Saddam and six of his assistants who masterminded the use of chemical weapons and Anfal operations against the Kurdish people during 1980's are facing judgment. The long waiting for the victims of Halabja and infamous Anfal operations against the Kurds is over. The witnesses are lining up to give their testimony of what happened to them and how Saddam shattered their peaceful lives forever. Let the whole world listen to the tragedy and crimes committed against the Kurds while some kept their silence and others continued supporting Saddam's regime.

Saddam Hussein and those who helped him in obtaining weapons of mass destruction and later took no notice that such weapons were used against the Kurds shall bear responsibility for what happened to the people of Halabja.

The Kurdish National Congress of North America is asking the United States, and the international community to take all measures necessary to prevent the proliferation and more importantly the use of weapons of mass destruction ever again. The capability of regimes and terrorist organizations that continue to threaten the world at large with weapons of mass destruction should be eliminated, and their desire to rebuild or acquire such weapons brought to an end once for all.

We are asking the United Nations and the entire world communities to assure that justice will prevail. The countries and companies that helped Saddam's regime to build chemical weapons should be brought to international world tribunal court; they should compensate for the damages they inflicted on the Kurdish families and help them rebuild their devastated land.

Public Relation Committee

Date published: Thursday, August 24, 2006